Explains Reasons For Two Licenses

A traveling salesman in Akron today has reclaimed his auto from the police after explaining why the front of his car should be from Georgia and the tail of it from Nebraska.

Police ordered the car towed off the street when they found that the license plates on the parked car didn't match. The salesman, who appeared at the traffic department shortly after, explained that only one plate is needed in Georgia and he had retained the Nebraska license on the rear as it matched his gasoline ration book and saved a good deal of red tape in obtaining fuel.
